Dear Author,

There is no meaningful cutoff for Similarity Index as per the Committee on Publication Ethics. When the need for academic integrity is paramount, editorial members read the Originality Report sentence-by-sentence for improper citations and make recommendations where necessary.

The article need major revision on materials and methods on how the study was performed. This was a clinical trial study, therefor should include how to recruite the subjects, the baseline characteristic of the subjects, how the randomization was perform, the placebos, and when and how the specimens was drawn form the subjects. The discussion needs more explanation on how the extract do justice to the result and state the study limitation.

Comments to the Author

1. When writing a manuscript in English, it would be much better if assisted by an English translater

2. To conduct one research the author should measure several parameters so that the mechanism of a phenomenon that will be examined will be seen. If just one parameter, you have to elaborate your findings with comprehensive discussion to explain the basic mechanism of free radicals increase caused by heavy exercise and lead to liver injury (ALP increase) and how maggosteen peel as an antioxidants work to decrease the ALP with other similar or quite similar articles.

3. One other important thing is you have to describe the concept in the introduction and result in discussion of your research in the manuscript clearly, not just show the facts.
